Culprits Barely Escape With Lives in Second Attack Near Brooklyn Church.

ONE SNIPPED BY BULLET

Dr. Carpenter Has Six Shooter Near Him in Pulpit as He Continues War on Evils.

Preaching the gospel with a six shooter close at hand and a gang of vice agents constantly trying to kill you might be calculated to upset the poise and equanimity of almost any minister, but not so with the Rev. Dr. W. Spencer Carpenter of the Bridge Street A. M. E. Church, Brooklyn.

Because of Dr. Carpenter's attacks on vice and gamblers he became the object Saturday night of the second attempt to kill him. The attackers, however, barely escaped with their own lives. The preacher fought them up an alley beside his church and the last seen of the vice agents they were disappearing over a fence to escape the bullets from the clergyman's gun.

Dr. Carpenter sat yesterday in his li-brary at 182 Duffield street, with a bandage around his forehead, his slashed up raincoat lying on a chair close by several empty cartridge shells on the table and "the rascal"—as he calls his revolver—lying under a white handkerchief and bulging up the linen in a fashion that would never be noticed. Groups of prosperous looking members of the congregation were streaming in inquire how he felt after his battle with the "razor swingers," as he called

URGENT PLEA MADE TO HELP POOR FUND

$525,000 Needed by Wednesday to Complete Fund.

George Blagden, treasurer of the Assolation for Improving the Conditions of he Poor, announced vesterday that less than 50 per cent of the $975,000 sought by the association for its relief work this year has been collected in the campaign which will close on Wednesday Mr. Blagden says it is absolutely necessary that the full amount be raised if the relief work is to be continued effectively and efficiently.

The unc teams of volunteer workers canvassing the city have reported con-tributions totalling $450,000. Mr. Blaglen has urged them to a greater effort so the balance, $525,000, will be colected before the campaign closes, Mr. Blagden also made public the asciation's annual financial report. It shows that the organization's relief work cost $885,000 last year. In 1916 it cost $737,385, and the total for 1914 was $532,887. In 1913, the year before the outbreak of the world war, $377,849 was expended by the association.

Last year there was a deficit of $2,586.

The Linen Store is piled high with stacks of the linens that reach nearly to the ceiling.

"It seems like the good old days," said a offers more than enough to cover the entire

But no? We bought the linens for our retail customers and they shall have first chance.

Even before the linens were landed a representative of a large manufacturer looked over a copy of the order and said, "I'll give you 50 per cent. advance on what you paid and import the linens myself."

If the sale creates in the homes around New York half the sensation that it has already created in the wholesale market the linens will sell out in a few days-and 137 cases is some quantity to sell at retail.

The getting of the linens was like an Arabian Nights' adventure.

We had made trips abroad, of course, during the war, but with little result. Linens were growing scarcer and scarcer.

This time "I'll go down into the heart of the reconstructed countries," said our Linen Chief, "the way is now open."

He found his prize.

The linens were in a store-house. Had been held since before the war. To keep them from government seizure the owner had washed some of them to make them look "used." He called his place a laundry.

The linens had been assembled from six manufacturers, and it was a joy to see once more the soft heavy satiny damask of pure flax, of which there has been so great a shortage. But the owner was away on a hunting trip.

It took three days to reach him by telegram. Three more days until he could return. We waited impatiently for six days-then closed the deal in a few hours. The linens are all pure linen—and at the price of cotton or cotton-mixed napery.

. It will be three years before the world's supply of linens catches up with the demand.

Flax crops are still short. And even when the flax begins to catch up, a year will be needed to make the flax into linen. Therefore, linen prices are still advancing.
